Frequently Asked Questions

Dear haters: this is for you

Will this book be useful? There is a high probability that it will be. the answer is yes. I am sure that many people will have doubts and fears regarding the reading of this book. I am aware: everyone is more busy and nobody wants to waste their time or squander their money. In addition, we have some people who simply hate what I do. because they are looking for something to complain about... But if you are truly-mind worried about investing your time (or if you simply feel curious due to the resistance of other people to read this book), these questions and answers are for you.

Here we have the main questions that people ask my team. but to me before taking on the challenge of increasing their number of followers:

Who the hell are you and why should I listen to you? You are not an influencer. famous.

You are right. Maybe you shouldn't listen to me. I am not an influencer. no one who has the highest status as a brand or celebrity. I am, simple- a social experimenter who constantly analyzes and learns, so that I can share what has worked and what hasn't for me case. By the time you read this book, I will probably be found carrying I finish my next social experiment; but if you look at my biography As an author, you will see that I have helped some brands and very well-known companies. sales over the years. And if you read this book, I promise you will learn- Do something valuable. If not, write an email to my team. Are your followers real?

Yes, they are real people. None of the strategies described in this book it has to do with the generation of fake followers (unless you refer "ras" as false like someone deceitful or dishonest, and unfortunately there are many people like this in the world, so many followers could be, indeed, false).

Are you currently using bots or scripts?

No. I have tried them in the past because I try everything, but I have found that they do not cause spectacular growth or a im-real application, so I don't use them.

Are your followers engaged?

If you look at my pages, you will see that I have a million followers, but Not a million people who engage with my posts. Talk-more about why this is so. To do this, we must first define some terms:

Followers: People who have indicated that they like or have followed a page.

Implication: The act of indicating that you like, commenting, or sharing a post.

Algorithms: Internal systems that control who receives a specific piece. content, as well as how many people watch it. They decide what content it ascends to the top positions of a channel's ranking social and what content gets stuck at the bottom.

Views: The number of people who have viewed or seen a publication.

When you see accounts with an enormous number of followers but with little involvement, it is not usually because their audience is not involved or because have fake followers. Usually, it is because algorithms have considering that there is content that achieves more engagement in which I want another place on the platform and I am prioritizing that the followers of the account see that content instead of the content of the previous page mentioned mind. When this happens, a page will not achieve a high implication because the account followers don't even see their content. When the algorithms recognize that you are a creator of Effective content will help you achieve greater reach with your posts. Snapchat has no place today in this book, but if you send me an email, I will send you a chapter about this platform (if this platform adjusts to your tastes.

Does this book only deal with buying followers and using media or networks in the that advertisers pay for the publication of their ads?

No. This book has nothing to do with buying followers. (especially fake followers). This book is about how to ap- look at the media or networks where advertisers pay for advertising creation of their announcements to grow at a fast pace and how to grow from fornature. Both ideas are outlined here. I share my strate- Gia, which is largely based on means or networks in which the advertisers pay for the publication of their ads, and also com- I share the natural or organic growth strategies of people like Ray.

Chan from 9GAG; Julius Dien; Joivan Wade from Wall Of Comedy; Adley Stump, and Prince Ea. My intention with this book is to provide many different strategies, so you can choose the one that adapts better for you.

What happens if I don't have a budget? Do you share strategies in this book of natural growth or those where no payment is required for followers or implication?

Yes. As I mentioned before, I share natural growth strategies planned by people like Ray Chan, Julius Dien, Joivan Wade, Adley Stump and Prince Ea, among others.

Using media or networks where advertisers pay for the publication of their ads. Isn't advertising cheating?

Use media or networks where advertisers pay for publication of your ads is like buying an ad in a newspaper or magazine. You pay for the space for your ad to be seen, but that doesn't mean that people will talk about what you do or will acquire your product from that service. This simply means that your ad will be there, and it will probably be seen by the people who read the newspaper or the magazine day/month your ad is published.

On social media, the idea is the same. Pay for your content simply means that it will appear in the news service of a certain number of people, and they will decide whether they like it or not.

Many people believe that using media or networks where advertisers pay for the publication of their ads is cheating, but not in- I understand why they think that. Paying simply means that you are getting yourself... guaranteeing the opportunity to be seen.

Who else uses media or networks in which advertisers pay for publication of their ads to grow their accounts?

Practically everyone. I'm joking (more or less). Look, the main companies, such as Netflix, Nike, Disney, and Paramount, use media or networks in which advertisers pay for the publication of their ads to promote their publications every single one of their days. Even the people who have grown naturally or organically, like Kim Kardashian and The Rock, have not completely grown naturally. They have marketing budgets for their movies and television session that helps them promote their brands and helps them generate a natural growth from its paid campaigns (which is something that I will teach you how to do it in this book.

In summary, there are very few successful brands that reach high levels without taking advantage of paid advertising. Certainly, some brands may that they start with a naturally viral success (for example, Dollar Shave Club) or that generate a solid customer base naturally, but to truly maintain sustained growth, the majority of the brands include paid advertising campaigns as part of their strategy growth challenges at some point in their journey towards success.

How much money will it cost to generate followers?

It all depends on your goals and the quality of your content. If you have available of great content, you will spend less, and if your content is not that good-no, you will spend more. (You will find more information about this in the section from "How much money should I invest?" in chapter three).

So, if I read this book will I get a million followers in thirty days?

I can. I must respond to your question with some follow-up questions. Do you need to get a million followers in thirty days? Why Do you want a million followers in thirty days? If you need them and the you want and are willing to follow the strategy I describe in these pages so, yes, it is possible, but it will require you to spend money. It may be it is more advantageous than waiting longer, than employing natural strategies sales and that you grow in that way; or it may make more sense to you quickly gain 10,000, 20,000 or 30,000 followers with my strategy tegia y luego crecer de forma orgánica. Todo depende de tus objetivos more important, which is what this book truly focuses on helping you with to define and understand.

My main question for you is the following: if this book could you Helping to grow, even if only by 10%, would that be worth it for you? Once again, the information presented in this book will return you the ... effort you dedicate.

Does having followers mean getting automatic income?

No. As I explain later, having many followers does not mean (a) that all those followers see your posts, (b) that everyone your followers are engaged, or (c) that they start to buy your products or immediate services. My advice, which I will explain in detail later on, it consists of making sure that once you achieve regularly- Yes, you keep polishing your skill and become as expert as possible. possible in content creation (for which I will give you recommendations- so that algorithms do not suppress your content, and thus the people will see your posts.

In addition, you should also come up with a strategy to monetize your tracking, and profitability will have a different aspect for each which. Personally, I monetized my follow-up by achieving performances. in which I gave talks, an agreement to write a book, appearances in podcasts and television, etc., so that I could get more clients and found an agency that helps people develop innovation strategies vacation for your businesses or companies. What I learned working with Taylor Swift

Over the past few years, I have focused greatly on analysis. and the optimization of content, statistics and data, and of the media or networks where advertisers pay for the publication of their ads, to help celebrities, athletes, and media companies improve their reach and rapidly grow your audience. I have gone through years of experimentation and observation to obtain the type of results that with- I continue now, but I think it all goes back to what I learned while bringing- I was hanging out with Taylor Swift. The time I spent with her allowed me to get to know the power of digital and social platforms and how to access it.

The fascinating thing about Swift is that she created her brand, her music, and her stardom. on her own. She started with a simple page on Myspace, where she opened a platform that encouraged face-to-face connection with its followers. Yes, because I intuitively understood that this would accelerate the reach of their brand. They personally responded to each and every one of the comments that he received on that platform, and whenever they requested an autograph or a photograph, he fulfilled. On one occasion, Taylor celebrated a session to meet and greet their fans that lasted thirteen hours (and that it ended up lasting seventeen hours), during which he personally signed autographs and took selfies with 3000 followers. He knew that every fan who stayed and stood in line to receive an autograph or a photo, he would be a fan (and a lifetime defender of their brand).

These brand advocates would propagate and share your music and his message with all his friends. Although he ended up meeting in person only 3000 followers, probably reached 100000 people that day. Each interaction was not limited to a single moment: their fans not only they told their friends, but they also published on their own channels the social media, images, autographs and videos they recorded in the event. The average Facebook user has 338 friends, so if each of her followers shared those images, Taylor could reach potentially 1,014,000 people. Fans would go and spread the word for her. They would tell all their friends and contacts on social media: "I like Taylor Swift" or "I just got this fantastic photo or autograph-graph."

Swift continues to make time for events like this. She attends birthday parties... birthdays, weddings, and bachelorette parties of their fans. In 2014, they performed the door of a handful of his followers with Christmas gifts, and more than 18 million people watched the videos of the deliveries of these gifts. In 2017, he invited a selected group of his fans to his house in London, Los Angeles, Nashville, and Rhode Island to celebrate parties in which they could listen to their sixth studio album, Reputation. This type of event—these are the way Swift gives back to her followers, by time that generates massive attention and interest.

This works in your case because it is authentic. It doesn't do these things to manipulate the system. Not only is she intelligent, talented, and grateful for the time—because his fans dedicate to him, but he has a good heart. And it is this—the reason that has fostered loyalty to its brand, which grows like a fire uncontrolled.

Despite this, Taylor cannot be in all places at the same time. At the beginning of his career, he lived in Nashville. Although he could celebrate a meeting to sign autographs and meet with 3000 followers at that city, I couldn't always find time for fans from other places of the world. Its followers from New York, London, China, Hong Kong, the India and Japan could not meet with her. Focusing on her presence- I could be online, however, I could still be in contact with people from all over the world, and also very quickly.

Before meeting with my team, Swift had spent around 75000. 150,000 US dollars (between about 67,500 and 135,000 euros)¹ on a completely Flash-format website that needed two days for making any changes every time I wanted to update it. When I looked at the statistics, I saw that people were spending less thirty seconds on the website and 90% of the people were leaving she as soon as she entered. She wanted Taylor to maximize the potential of her web page, that will return to the underlying fundamental idea of your brand: in-person interactions. With the right strategy, I could take advantage of on their website to foster stronger connections among their fans.

My speech consisted of the fact that with the technological platform that my the team had developed, in six hours we could create a page with completely new for her according to her specifications. In a meeting, she I showed how we could actively modify any element. from the website in real time. She could change the background, modify and transform the navigation, and control every element of that page web, which provided him with the power and creativity to develop co-so much how he wanted to express himself in front of his fans. For example, each once he releases a new album, he could quickly redesign everything webpage in a matter of minutes to match the aesthetic of his new album.

This ability to quickly modify the website allowed him. fostering a stronger connection with their followers allowing them to that will be expressed as it wishes and whenever it wants, in the same way as he had been able to do it on Myspace at the beginning of his career. To the after two years of use, using the platform that my team had created alongside some brilliant creation technology platforms of communities we had partnered with, we did so collective, that the time their followers spent on their website will increase from less than thirty seconds to more than twenty-two minutes.

How did we achieve such an increase in the time people spent on your website? By providing your followers a reason to stay. We facilitate communication among fans because we gave ourselves told that Swift could only talk to a certain number of followers at the same time. Therefore, we created a community in the that the fans could talk among themselves about their love for Swift and their music.

We also created a system where fans could convert their Facebook profiles on a fan page for Taylor Swift less than sixty seconds. This system automatically obtained the names and photos of the fans along with photos of Swift and the covers of their albums so that they could have their own web pages of fans. These fan websites were created with the same money-the technological form we use to create your website, so that fans could customize and personalize all the elements of their page on the followers' web. Fans felt connected to Swift as if formaran parte de su equipo: podían emplear la misma plataforma que she was employing and taking any detail from her and recreating it same. In a few months, more than 35,000 web pages of follow-I do not have the exact figures, but I am sure it was a record number of fan websites created never before for a specific artist in that era.

To witness how well the act of promoting some cone-strongest ties with fans in the case of Swift's brand planted a seed in my head. I learned that if fans feel connected, they are willing to share content, messages, and products with all those who are those they know. As soon as I became aware of the power I had this became a fundamental part of my entire approach. I realized It tells you that you don't need to spend millions of dollars on marketing to reach the masses: you just have to get people to buy

Not everyone can be Taylor Swift, and that's okay.

Since I can remember, I have always wanted to contact a celebrity. media personalities, executives, athletes, and entrepreneurs. I started in the film school. I loved movies and wanted to learn how produce them and deepen the business aspect of the industry of show.

From there, I dove into the world of media or networks in which advertisers pay for the publication of your ads, helping to create one of the companies of optimization of the most important advertising payments in the world that managed close to 70 million dollars a year in expenses in these media or networks by Fortune 500 index companies.

My diverse experiences have provided me with the opportunity to work on projects for some of the most prominent people in world: Taylor Swift (as I have already mentioned), in addition to Jason Statham, Rihanna, Katie Couric and the companies I have mentioned before-Previously. Working with these companies has always fueled a curiosity-certainty and a drive within me about what is necessary to succeed, become a star or be a famous character.

After ten years of helping celebrities, brands, and companies to reach a large audience, I started to wonder if my ideas and techniques could apply to someone starting from scratch. Thus, I was occupied... a person who had never conducted an experiment to determine if a person would shown on television, in a movie, or in written media could grab a large following worldwide. The premise was that if I could get it in the case of a stranger, then I could help- to give anyone who had something to offer to achieve heaps of followers and exposure. It could help people who are worth it to generate validation and credibility, and bring them one step closer to the consequence-creation of their dreams.

While I was considering whom to choose for this project, I realized that that, in fact, I was the perfect candidate: I was not famous, I had never appeared on television, in a movie or in written media, and (all-via) had not done anything that society considered particularly ge- He was just an ordinary guy who thought it would be fun to connect to meet people from all over the world. Thus, in June 2017 (yes, these strategies are still working today, and we continuously employ them again to help our private clients get more publicity I started to work on my little experiment. I implemented everything what I had learned during more than ten years of experience in the digital and social networks to see how quickly I could get real people from all over the world would follow my Facebook page.

To my surprise, by July (in less than a month) I had achieved of more than a million followers from over a hundred countries. I didn't know about those people and, certainly, they did not know me before this experience mento. When I saw the number of "likes" on my page on the screen from my computer, I couldn't believe what was happening. It's not that I wouldn't have known that those figures were possible: I had already achieved that kind of implication for my clients, but they were major celebrities and traps that were in the front row of society. What I what surprised me was that I, Brendan Kane, a digital strategist who lives behind from the scenarios (or behind the screens), without, in essence, a platform, I could become a public figure on a global level. Suddenly I was able to generate a great impact in a short time.

The fact that he is not a rock star, an actor, or a person notable in any way and that, despite this, could manage to get a million people from all over the world followed me, which is remarkable, strange and powerful. It makes me feel a great responsibility and has provided new and interesting experiences in my life. I have received from everything: from messages that said how people loved me or how I have supposedly an inspiration in his life to death threats or messages of hate mail when I have shared political content that they do not align with the worldview of part of my audience.

This experiment also allowed me to progress until I was able to not just reach a million followers on Instagram and achieve a growth-huge lie on YouTube (for our private clients), but also well achieve agreements to write books, opportunities to give talks, appearances on television and spectacular amounts of references from potential clients to make my innovation agency become march.

But despite that, I still do not consider myself a celebrity or even close to one. uninfluencer. I got that initial following in literally thirty Days, which implies something very different from someone taking years to obtain nerlos. I didn't do it to become famous, but rather as an experience. social environment to see if it was possible to achieve it and to understand the impact-the last thing I would have. I also did it precisely to share my experience and my knowledge with all of you. If I had taken- If I were serious about being famous, I would have invested a huge amount of follow-up work to enhance and develop my brand and the connections actions with recent followers and I would continue to strive to achieve new followers every day.

I want to emphasize that achieving a huge audience and maintaining a real and interested followers involve a tremendous amount of ti power, energy and work.

It all boils down to the fact that if I could do it, you can too. This book it will teach you how. With these tools you can prepare to give a step closer to achieving your dreams.

How to achieve your professional career aspirations as soon as possible

I was recently working with an aspiring actress in Los Angeles. She is very talented, but essentially an unknown who possesses little credits. I asked him how the auditions had been going for him and I he explained that he was in a meeting with one of the main directors the Hollywood casting that had told him that his demo video she was great and that she was an excellent actress, but that she would make herself (and a huge favor to the casting director if I had tens of thousands of se-followers on Twitter. Although following on Twitter has nothing to being a good actress, this would give her an advantage when the producers had to make a decision about whom to hire.

The value of a great following does not only apply to unknown people. Also, it is something valuable at the highest levels. Sophie Turner, the actress from Game of Thrones explains that she has been chosen to interpret scripts passing in front of better actresses because they have more followers pains. In an interview published in Porter magazine, I explained: 'I did a test for a project, and it was between me and another girl who is much better actress than I, much better, but I had the followers, so they gave me the paper. It's not the right thing, but it's part of the cinema industry today.'²

And the numbers on social media are not only desirable for people: they also apply to brands. According to a study conducted by Wharton Business School, popularity on social media can show the ability of a startup to create its brand, in-integrate consumer feedback and attract specific groups of

I have even seen how having many followers has meant a different reference in my own life from the point of view of validation. As my figures have increased, I have been able to take advantage of the influence in favor of my own business. I have been able to acquire more clients and collaborations. The figures on social media are becoming increasingly important. they can have a huge effect on your ability to pave your way and develop important collaborations. The good news is that it is not necessary It takes being a mega star to succeed. Just look at me: I am not in Game of Thrones nor am I a talented singer. Before conceptualizing my system, some people (even beyond the atypical cases, like Justin Bieber) found out how to gain influence. This is great, but the problem is that most people do not have

Those without a strategy try to, simply, publish content hoping that it will become trendy and they go viral, and in some infrequent cases there are people who have Good luck. Most, however, fail. Honestly- For most of us, we do not have that amount of time. the world is advancing quickly and we need to not lose our footing so that we can to maximize the potential of our talents as soon as possible.

Due to the dizzying speed of today's world, everyone wants some quick results, which leads many people to use the means or networks where advertisers pay for the publication of their ads. They imagine that they can easily buy the attention of their followers and clients. They try to boost their posts or take advantage of the ad-Facebook and Instagram ads manager for positioning sponsored content. Don't get it wrong: these tactics play a role in my strategy, but those who use them without a solid plan will never they will manage to generate the impact they are expecting. Inevitably, it ends up being somewhat expensive and frustrating. They come across a central obstacle they focus on what they believe is attractive instead of concentrating on what, In fact, it will generate emotional responses.

One of the brands I have worked with (Skechers) spent hundreds. thousands of dollars taking images and video content that worked- they were born in written media and on television, and simply tried, reuse them for social and digital platforms. Unfortunately, it is not something so easy. After just two weeks working with Skechers, I helped them overcome the combined results of thirteen years of implication joint action in the social videos of all Skechers pages in Facebook. Think that if it is so difficult for large brands, which provides- but research teams that help you figure this out, how Could someone figure all that out on their own?

Probably as a result of this frustration, another tactic to what people have resorted to is buying fake followers. This is a practice that I do not recommend, as it is something shady and incorrect. It could to settle a fleeting validation if we only take a glance, but it is not sustainable. If people find out, it will make you seem untrustworthy. Currently, there are many ways to find out. It's not worth the risk of tarnishing your reputation. Besides, you won't actually learn anything. It is necessary that you are willing to do the same if you want to be successful. Often they I tell people that, of course, I am not the smartest person that there in the room, but I never give up until I find the answer (or the winning variation) that I am looking for.

Moreover, this is how anything great is created. Some even talk about "failing faster do", because that is the only way to learn. Through the aná- analysis, learning, failure, and disappointment, in the end, you will succeed.

Too many people waste too much time and money on a single content element. They invest all their resources in an image or a video, they share it online once and expect it to work as by magic art. Unfortunately, it is not usually like that, and the messages in the social networks move quickly, so you do not have that amount of time to waste.

I have worked with companies that have spent millions of dollars to promote a single piece of content that ultimately fails and not involving its main audience. This is one of the main reasons areas for which I developed this system. You must test it with your audience create as many variations of a content element as you can and being willing to carry out modifications on those variations when messages are not well received.
